The bill was lifty-seven france. After coffee was served my friend went out to get clears. I waited an hour and a half for him, and then, as he did not make his appearance, I expressed my astonishment to the waiter. He grinned. "Monsieur is from the provinces?" he asked.

A Car Adventure.

There were five of us—yes, five as happy fellows as ever were let loose from college. It was "vacation," and we concluded to take a trip to the falls. We got aboard the cars at M., and were, soon traveling very rapidly towards our destination. We had just seated ourselves and prepared for a

"That explains all. There are just now a great many Parisians who breaklast with provincials; but when the bill is brought in, they have a pressing engagement somewhere else."

There was a great crowd waiting their turn. I was given a ticket, with a number on it. Night began to fall when my number was called. I gave up all hope of seeing the Exhibition that day. Since then, I have been prevented, sometimes by one incident, and sometimes by another; so that I know nothing whatever about the Exyntian palace, or the Chiller of children," said Bill.

by another; so that I know nothing whatever about the Egyptian palace, or the Chinese house, or the restaurants, except by the descriptions given by the newapapers, which I might have read quietly, coolly, and at ease, in the arbor of my garden. I need scarcely say, I was extremely ambitious to be present at the state performance, given at the grand opera. I was informed by a public notice that no tickets would be delivered except to people of high, aristocratic rank. Nevertheless, I ingeniously went to the ticket office, and asked for a parquette stall. I was asked:

"Are you connected with an embassy?"

"Yo, I am not."

"Then he is a married man, and the father of children," said Bill.

It devolved upon me to commence operations. Accordingly I entered the car in which we were informed the lovers were. Sure enough, there they were. The girl, thinking, I suppose, that she must give her lover all the seat, had taken a seat on his knee, and he, for the purpose of protecting her, had thrown his arm around her waist; and so they sat in real soft lovers' style.—All this I gathered at a glance. Stepping up to them, I said:

"My, Jones, what in the decomment of the father of children," said Bill.

"You are an adventurer, then; clear opt.

"I withdrew, mortified to death. At the door of the opera I was accosted by a man smelling very strougly of brandy. He beckoned he to follow him. We entered a vilner's.

"He said to me: I have a parquette stall; but to use it requires discretion and tact, for all the tickets for the state performance are personal. Hirea Turkish costume, and pass yourself off as a secretary of the Turkish Embassy. It would be a wise precaution if you blacken your face somewhat with a burnt cork. But, if the check-taker does seem to suspect your identity, you must pretend to fly in a towering passion; and you must unsheath your aword, bawing, "Aboustracos! Calamedos! Abdel Mejid Eunachas potentatiasos!" Then he will let you go on."

"A thousand franes. There are only four tickets in the market. These we got trom gentiemen belonging to the most aristorade families, who prefer sapping at the Moulin Rouge with houris, to playing the part of supernumeraries in a theatre, where the leading parts will be filled by Emperors."

"A thousand tranes. Why that is twice as much as I give for my house in a year. I declined the offer. The stall was sold to an American, who could not believe the ticket was good, 'twas so cheap. He said: 'Yil be teetotally squashed, if I could have got such a seat in New York for less than a thousand dollars in gold.' I was not more fortunate af the other theatres. I succeeded in procuring a stall at the Varieties. When evening came, I found a man it reservation of my seat. The checkets.

more fortunate at the other theatres. I succeeded in procuring a stall at the Varieties. When evening came, I found a man in possession of my seat. The check-taker explained to me that a mistake had been made, and two tickets had inadvertently been issued. He politely offered to return my money at the theatre's rates. He paid me seven francs. It cost me thirty francs at a theratical agency. At last, humbugged, jeered, swindled, jobbed, cl-bowed, trod on, after sleeping with a cook, and eating leavings at restaurants—and all to see the performance behind the curtain, I determined to quit Paris, and return home. I shall return to Paris when it holds fewer crowned heads."

The speech of the King of Prussia, at the opening of the North German Pariliament.

The speech of the King of Prassia, at the opening of the North German Parliament, looks immediately toward the completion of the project of confederating North and South Germany. He tells the Parliament that the proposed bills are suggested with that purpose, and asks them to "direct their efforts to the completion of the work." This does not accord with the Salzburg deliberations, where France and Austria agreed that there should be no such union.

Pendleton, in a screnade speech at Cleve-

Pendleton, in a serenade speech at Cleve-land, advocated the redemption of Govern-ment bonds in legal tenders, without undue ment bonds in legal tenders, without undue inflation of the currency, by which twenty-five millions per year would be saved. He spoke of the national bank system as a great evil.

A cotemporary says a good many thought Gen. Porter should have been shot. If every man was shot who many think ought to be, we might have a vacancy to fill in the Board of Aldermen.

A Bass Grone.

[Translated for Every Saturday from Le Tempe 1]

I met at Amiens a Pieard, who had just returned from Paris. He said to me: "Sir, I resished the capital Sanday svening I had a letter of introduction to a tavern keeper. He gave me a cordial greeting, and proposed to me to share his cook's bed, which, having no more aristocratic oburn. I was obliged to accept; of a truth the cook did not inconvenience me. He went to bed at two 'clock, A. M., and at four o'clock A. M., he got up to go to the markets. Bir, I did not see one of the marvels which carried me to Paris. At the review I was behind the horse of a Mindeipal Gunrd, and the horse had no regard for deceny. The trowd kept shoring, until for one moment I was between the horse's hind legs. I went everywhere to see the foreign sovereigns go by but the Court coaches flaw by in a cloud of dust and horsemen. There were, however, people who were delighted; they had stood four hours to see a dragoon's helmet, and said to each other as they wont home:

"I' am sure 'twas the Czar. I caught a glimpse of a red cordon."

"Not a bit of It; 'twas the King of Prassia!"

"Ye are both out; 'twas the military household of the Czar going to the Eysec to escort him."

"Sust at this moment a pastry-cook's apprentice, who was sprawling on a limb, fell on my head. The crowd began to glggle, while I was aff.

The 'prentice made no excuse, but only said:

"Boss, I have flattened your stovepipe. Will you take my cap in exchange? I thought proper to decline this exchange, Radly as my hat looked, it nevertheless was more in conformity with court etiquette than the pastry cook apprentice's cap. The blow given me by this fellow's fall nearly put my shoulder out of joint. I wished to take a hack. The driver looked at me, scratched his chin, and said in a familiar way to me: 'Hacks, old horse, are not for your phiz. I am engaged to Count de Rismarck.' However, I represented to at me, scratched his chin, and said in a familiar way to me: 'Hacks, old horse, are not for your phiz. I am engaged to Count de Bismarck.' However, I represented to the driver that I was wounded, and out of humanity, he agreed to take me to my hotel for ten francs above the lawful rate. I must say this hack-driver is the only noble-hearted man I met in the estimable class of drivers. All the others, when I tried to speak to them, would fly away like butterfiles. I observed, too, a carriage with a load in it goes on a walk at Paris, while an empty carriage goes on a gallop.

The day I got into a back which was stant locks of the same. The body of the Emperor remained at Lisso's house until last week, when it was removed to its present location, during which time he made use of it as a means of speculation.

He also disposed of whatever effects belonging to Maximilian he could obtain, charging large sums for small pleces of his blood-stained garments, which he cut up and sold. It is also alleged that he has even removed a small portion of the skull, for which be obtained a large sum, replacing it with wood. I cannot vouch for this, while an empty carriage goes on a gallop.

The driver came up and swore he should not take me to the Exhibition. Fortunately a policeman interfered, and ordered him to drive me where I wished to go.
